

Comprehensive School Safety with Emily Torres

Emily Torres, MPH Center Manager for The National Center for School Safety (NCSS)

Emily Torres, MPH, has worked with NCSS at the Prevention Research Collaborative (PRC) since 2019. She has experience with youth violence prevention, community engagement, and providing technical assistance to schools to improve health and safety. Prior to joining the PRC, Emily worked for the Ohio Department of Health in their Primary Prevention Division. She holds a Master's in Public Health from the University of Michigan.

Emily will discuss the comprehensive NCSS school safety model, highlighting a variety of strategies to improve school safety, their evidence base, and considerations for equity. Her talk will also explore the value of taking a more holistic, positive youth development approach to firearm violence prevention that combines strategies like behavioral threat assessment, social and emotional learning, and restorative justice.

Hear Emily speak on Wednesday, July 19th 11:30 AM to 12:30 PM ET
